Vision's Interaction with Other Senses

Event Details

Topic

Vision's Interaction with Other Senses:

Many speak about the five senses as if they were all created equal. This includes members of the eye care professions. This kind of view has led some fields to attempt to own "reading" problems or "reversals," for example, because they could be seen as auditory or kinesthetic problems. The visual process is used by humans to derive meaning and direct action. In many behavioral models, it incorporates input from and integration with all the other sensory modalities. So how does vision and the visual process interact with the other senses?

Course Description/Highlights

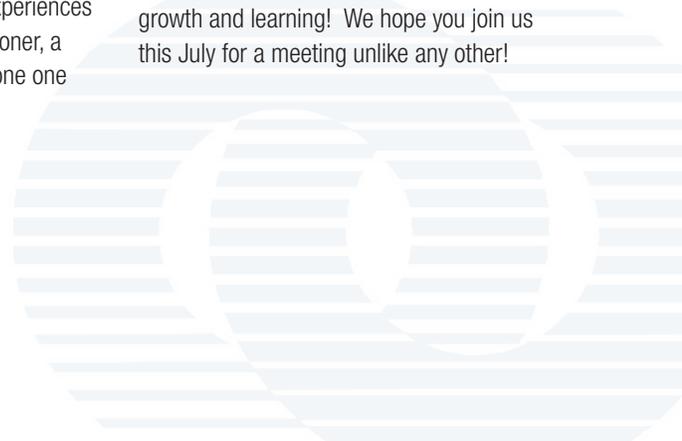

CCVC is a unique meeting that draws attendees from all over the world. Students and Residents are welcome to attend on a space available basis, adding to the diversity of the group. CCVC is unlike most CE events you've attended, it's interactive and invites participation – everyone is a speaker, and alternately, everyone is a listener as well.

A general topic is announced each year, enticing attendees to come check out this one-of-a-kind event. Once everyone comes together in Memphis, the questions for the conference are revealed and the groups are assigned. Small groups are created and assigned a group facilitator. The groups disperse to various areas of the SCO campus where they can spread out, discuss, demonstrate, plan, and create - whatever is necessary. Everyone in the group has a voice and shares their experiences – whether a student, a retired practitioner, a faculty member, or a therapist, everyone one can and does contribute.

Later, (with ample breaks and delicious refreshments provided) the small groups come back together as a large group and present their "answers." As a large group we listen, question, share, and discuss. No one person or group has THE ANSWER (often there isn't ONE answer) – but themes and patterns start to emerge and consensus is reached. Ideas for future research and exploration are realized.

The evenings bring ample time to socialize and enjoy the company of colleagues and friends. There is always time for some Memphis BBQ, touring the iconic sites of Memphis, a trip to Beale Street to take in some live music, etc.

CCVC is enjoyable for many reasons - the location, the hospitality, the interactions, the (optometric) family, the new friends, and the growth and learning! We hope you join us this July for a meeting unlike any other!
